To whom it may concern,

I support any measures that increase air quality, in particular increased regulation around the use of wood as a fuel source in poorly designed and maintained combustion heaters. Increased regulation around the sale and installation of low efficiency wood burners and better public education is required. Banning combustion heaters in densely populated areas should also be considered.

I also note that the report does not address motor bikes, which have lower emissions standards than other road vehicles, nor does it address two stoke motors (apart from domestic motors) used in trail bike and outboard motors and I suggest these should be specifically mentioned with recommended actions.

Active transport deserves more than a token mention as does heavy rail for commuting and freight movements.

Kind regards,

Ben Hope
